HISTORY

Dache, which started as a farm for trees, herbs, and produce, has pushed to the forefront of tea blend development by directly cultivating a range of ingredients for herbal and other teas after its rebirth as a fully fledged tea company in the 2010s. It is our mission to develop great tea matched to every shade in the spectrum of tastes throughout the market for our customers.

OUR BUSINESS

- Competitive green and black tea cultivation through separate tea fields with their own environments.
 - Trusted capacity in the development of tea blends with the direct cultivation of a range of herbal and other tea ingredients through early experience operating as a farm.

“Dache Dawon” began in 2010, with a set of values encompassing harmony, variety, and beauty from nature. “Dache” translates to “variety” but can also be interpreted to mean “color of tea” or “place that has tea.”

Employing our past experience as a farm, we successfully produce five master's teas, ten herbal teas, and two tea blends comprised of our own herbs and other ingredients, and the announcement of our new seasonal product “Quarterly Dache” has sparked much anticipation on the market.

As our main tea plantation sits inland at a high altitude where the production period of the first flush is slowed by one to two weeks, we have from early on focused on black tea there while our second tea plantation along the coast is dominated by green tea, making us well-equipped for the quality production of both green and black teas.

Dache, with its strength in variety, stands ready for new business opportunities and looks forward to meeting a diversity of buyers from around the world.
